ABSTRACT

This publication lists more than 2,000 pseudonyms used by modern Chinese authors who have lived and published in the twentieth century. About sixty percent reside or resided in Mainland China, twenty-five percent lived in Taiwan, and about fifteen percent lived in Singapore and other overseas areas. Pseudonyms and real names are arranged alphabetically according to romanized names in two separate lists. Cross references are made to authors using more than one pseudonym. The Chinese characters of the author's name are supplied in parentheses. Dates of birth and death are given when known. Possible reasons for the frequent use of pseudonyms are that an author wished to remain anonymous, editors used them to show respect to the author, pseudonyms are used to conceal the fact of multiple authorship of articles for one magazine, or pseudonyms were used for political reasons. The Asian Studies Center was established in the fall of 1962 to further knowledge and understanding of the countries of Asia, with a concentration on South Asia and the Far East. In 1965 an NDEA Center for South Asian Language and Area Studies was approved as one of its programs. The function of the Center is to train persons who wish to become area specialists and to enrich general and liberal education. The Center is designed to strengthen academic programs, stimulate research and publications, and correlate activities in other related areas.

PREFACE

Over the last century, China has experienced extremely turbulent times. Almost continual internal strife and repeated internal crises have caused not only political instability but also great socio-economic difficulties. Although it is always perilous in a non-democratic society to comment on current political and social conditions, contemporary Chinese authors have felt, as have their colleagues the world over, that it was their responsibility to describe the life of their countrymen as they saw it and to voice criticism of social injustices and inadequacies in domestic economic institutions. It should be emphasized, moreover, that Chinese literary works have traditionally reflected (and still reflect) conditions of life in China as well as political and social issues of the times. China's period of turmoil, therefore, was aptly depicted and commented on in numerous scholarly works and literary writings.

It is understandable that, since the turn of the century, the uncertainties of China's internal political life and the fear of reprisals have been, in no small measure, responsible for a great many Chinese authors electing to use pseudonyms instead of their real names in order to avoid possible political reprisals. However, it should be acknowledged that pseudonyms were always used in China's long literary history, but more often than not for reasons other than political reprisals.

This present work introduces more than two thousand pseudonyms used by modern Chinese authors. Hence, authors who lived and published in the twentieth century are included. Of the authors listed, only about one quarter represent exclusively social science disciplines, while the rest are known to be belletrists. As to the geographic distribution of authors listed, about sixty percent reside or resided in Mainland China, twenty-five percent in Taiwan, and about fifteen percent in Singapore and other overseas areas.

The author of this work, Austin Chi-wei Shu, is Bibliographer for East Asian Studies at Michigan State University. Prior to his coming to MSU, Mr. Shu, a specialist in Chinese bibliography, held responsible positions for the past twenty-five years in research libraries in Nanking, Taipei, Singapore, and Honolulu. In fact, much of the material included in this volume was accumulated during his library career here and abroad. To our knowledge, no other similar work of pseudonyms of modern Chinese authors has been published since 1936, when Yüan Yung-chin first issued his list of pseudonyms in Peiping, containing some five hundred entries. In the introduction following, Mr. Shu gives additional background on the origins of Chinese pseudonyms and explains some of the problems encountered in the bibliographic control of Chinese works.

Modern Chinese Authors: A List of Pseudonyms, by Austin C. W. Shu, is the first in the East Asia Series of occasional papers published by the Asian Studies Center of Michigan State University.

INTRODUCTION

Chinese authors first used pseudonyms in their short stories, fiction, plays, and folk literature. Although most Chinese classical works are either anonymous or pseudonymous, we cannot say with assurance that a Chinese author deliberately concealed or obscured his identity. Later, pseudonyms were generally used by editors, compilers, and printers merely as an expression of respect to the writer. This practice can be traced to Hsiao T'ung, 501-531, in his Chao-ming wên hsüan. The real name of the author did not appear on any of the titles selected or edited by him. This practice was also followed by Yao Nai, 1732-1815, in his Ku wên tz'u lei tsuan, and Tsêng Kuo-fan, 1811-1872, in his Shih pa chia shih ch'ao. Han Yü's name was replaced by his courtesy name Han Tui-chih on his famous work Yüan tao. The poems of Ts'ao Chih were also published under his courtesy name, Ts'ao Tzu-chien.

In commercial publications such as magazines and newspapers, many editorials and articles were written under a pseudonym. Chinese authors often use more than one pseudonym. Chou Shu-jên had fifty-four, for example; Wang Sên-jan, thirty-eight; and Su Hsüan-ying, thirty-three. Chou Tso-jên, a famous contemporary Chinese writer gives the following reasons for the frequent use of pseudonyms:

1. An author of controversial works often desires to avoid creating personal animosity.

2. If two or more articles in a magazine or newspaper appear under the same name, the publication loses appeal. Hence, using one or more pseudonyms is a way to attract readers for publications with a limited staff.

3. An author wishes to remain anonymous.

4. When freedom of speech is curbed, authors use pseudonyms for political reasons.

Chinese pseudonyms are derived in several ways: (1) by assuming the name of another real person; e.g., Ts'ao Yü (曹禺), the pseudonym of Wan Chia-pao (萬家寶), appears to be the real names of two other persons; (2) by using the author's birthplace; e.g., Kuei-ling-lao-jên (桂嶺勞人), the pseudonym of Liang Chi (梁冀) and T'eih-ling-i-min (鐵嶺遺民), the pseudonym of Ho Yüeh-ch'ien (何曰謙) indicate former domiciles in Kwangsi and Liaoning; (3) by using a forename or forenames only; e.g., Chih-mo (志摩), one of the pen names of Hsü Chih-mo (徐志摩) and Fei-mêng (費蒙), the pen name of Li Fei-mêng (李費蒙); (4) by splitting the surname into two characters; e.g., Ma-ko (馬各), the pseudonym of Lo Hsüeh-liang (駱學良); (5) by rearranging the order of forenames; e.g., Liu Ching-hêng (劉靜衡), the pseudonym of Liu Hêng-ching (劉衡靜), (6) by using the name of one's den, study, or private library; e.g.,

Ts'ui-fên-ko-chu (崔苻閣主), the pseudonym of Chang Chün-hêng (張鈞衡); (7) by retaining one's surname and adding courtesy names; e.g., Lo Chih-hsi (羅志希), the pseudonym of Lo Chia-lun (羅家倫), and Chiang Pai-li (蔣百里), the pseudonym of Chiang Fang-chên (蔣方震); (8) by transliterating the romanized initials; e.g., Hsi-t'i (西諦), the pseudonym of Chêng Chên-to (鄭振鐸), comes from C.T., an abbreviation of Chên-to; (9) by changing the surnames; e.g., I-ku-hsüan-t'ung (疑古玄同), the pseudonym of Ch'ien Hsüan-t'ung (錢玄同).

According to Chinese custom, it is impolite to call a person by his real name or write it in a letter addressed to him. However, in the compilation of bibliographies, entries should be listed under the real name of an author. If the bibliographer is aware that an author is using a pseudonym, he must establish the real name for the author entry. A pseudonym can be used only when the bibliographer fails to discover the real name. Mencius asked: "You recite his poems, you read his books, yet you do not know who he is; is that possible?" (頌其詩讀其書不知其人可乎？). So, it is incumbent upon a qualified bibliographer to recognize not only the author's real name but also his birthplace and career, as well as his influence on his era, in order to determine his identity. Chang Hsüeh-ch'êng has aptly phrased the aims and objectives of bibliographic work as "Pien chang hsüeh shu, k'ao ching yüan liu" (辨章學術考鏡源流). His statement can be translated as follows: "Identify the school of thought, and search for its sources."

Identifying a Chinese author's name as a pseudonym is very difficult. Mistakes discovered in library catalogs show that the pseudonym of an author has been entered as his real name. In the recently published Anglo-American Cataloging Rules, rule 42 provides: "If all the works of an author appear only under one pseudonym, enter him under the pseudonym." The same rule also provides: "If the works of an author appear under several pseudonyms or under his real name and one or more pseudonyms, enter him under the name by which he is primarily identified in modern editions of his works and in reference sources. In case of doubt, prefer the real name." An alternative is provided: "If the works of an author appear under several pseudonyms or under his real name and one or more pseudonyms, enter each work under the name he used for it. Make 'see also' reference to connect the names."

The Anglo-American Cataloging Rules are more flexible since they offer the cataloger alternative rules for establishing entries. Consistency in entries in a particular library can be worked out, but inconsistency of entries among the libraries of a district, of a state, or of a nation are inevitable. The Library of Congress prefers entering the works of an author under his real name although he may be well known under his pseudonyms. For example, Aurelia Gay Mace and Samuel Langhorne Clemens are used as the author entries for the pseudononymous writers, Aurelia and Mark Twain.

Chou Shu-jên and Li Fei-kan are also entered under their real names instead of their pseudonyms, Lü-hsün and Pa-chin. Library of Congress procedure allows some exceptions, however; establishing an entry under a pseudonym is permissible when the real name is unknown, when the author wishes it withheld, or when the pseudonym has become fixed in literary history and biography: e.g., Roy Rockwood, George Sand, George Eliot, Maksim Gorkii, et al. Despite a library's need for flexibility in adopting bibliographic rules to its particular system, all libraries should check the practices established by the Library of Congress so that they may take advantage of its cataloging system.

This list of pseudonyms, containing about 2,000 names, was compiled from an inventory of the authority file for pseudonyms gathered at the Nanyang University Library, Singepore. This work was continued at the Oriental Library, University of Hawaii, Honolulu, and completed at the Michigan State University Library, East Lansing. It includes new pseudonyms of Chinese authors in Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Singapore, who are little known to library catalogers in American libraries. In this list, the Chinese characters of the author's name are supplied in parentheses. All pseudonyms and real names are arranged alphabetically according to romanized names, but are separated into two lists. The real names are given when available. In line with the new Anglo-American rules, a "see also" reference is used to connect the names of authors using more than one pseudonym. It is hoped that subsequent editions of this list will include new pseudonyms.

Thanks are due to Dr. Richard E. Chapin, Director of Libraries, and Dr. Eugene [illegible]enko, Head, International Library at Michigan State University, for their encouragement and assistance. I am especially indebted to Dr. T. H. Tsien, Professor of Chinese Literature and Curator, Far Eastern Library at the University of Chicago, for his valuable advice in preparation of this list, and to Dr. William T. Ross, Director of the Asian Studies Center at Michigan State University, for financial support to have this guide published. My special appreciation goes to my wife, Hsiang-teh Fang (方象德) for her painstaking work in the Chinese calligraphy and also for checking the names.
